10. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

All Saints Anglican Church, constructed from local clay bricks, pit sawn timber and roofed with asbestos shingles (originally sheoak shingles), comprising original building fabric of 1841 and 1938 additions, has cultural heritage significance for the following reasons:

 - the place contains elements of one of the oldest church buildings in Western Australia;
 - the place is associated with European settlers of the Swan Valley;
 - the place is closely associated with James Stirling's first exploration of the Swan River;
 - the place is a fine example of the Old Colonial Gothick Picturesque style;

the place is important as an example of structures that were typical of the local architecture built by European settlers between 1829 and 1849 that replicated their way of life in Britain.

The adjacent residence and cloister have been assessed as having little significance.
