10. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE
Upton House, a two-storey brick residence, has cultural heritage significance for the following reasons:
 - it is a rare example of an 1840s house in Western Australia demonstrating a sophisticated use of Georgian symmetry and simplicity, and a level of building craft not readily available to the general community;
 - the building and its extensive surrounding gardens are a prominent landmark in the Australind area;
 - the building is important for its long and close association with the Clifton family, whose members contributed greatly to the development of Western Australia;

the place was the childhood home of daughters of Marshall Waller Clifton who were important artists in Western Australian arts history; and, the building contributes to the community's sense of place, a reminder of the early European settlement of the district.
