10. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Bank of New South Wales (fmr), Perenjori, a single storey, timber-framed, weatherboard-clad bank chamber and residence dating from the Inter-War period, has cultural heritage significance for the following reasons:

the place is a rare in Western Australia as a timber bank building, and in particular as an extant example of a timber framed, weatherboard clad bank chamber and residence dating from the Inter-War period; and, the place was constructed in response to the revival of gold mining ventures in the district in the Interwar period, and was designed to hold gold from nearby mines.

The outbuildings and access ramp are of little significance. The fittings and displays relating to the museum may have cultural heritage value in their own right, but have not been included in this assessment.
