10. STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE
Fmr Whaling Station, Cheyne Beach, a former whaling station and now an archaeological site, has cultural heritage significance for the following reasons:

the place contains well preserved structural remains and artefact deposits, including an uncommon whale bone floor;

the place is the only archaeological site containing remains of a nineteenth-century shore-based whaling station on the southern coast of Western Australia; and, the place was the longest occupied of the nineteenth century whaling stations in Western Australia.
