Holy Trinity Church (1856, 1907, 1985), attached Hall (former Church of St. John: built 1861, relocated 1905) and adjacent Rectory (1875 with attached kitchen of 1853) has cultural heritage significance for the following reasons:
 - the buildings contributes to the York community's sense of place for the role played by religion in the early years of the settlement of the area and as a reminder of the colonial development of York and the Avon Valley;
 - the buildings have a close association with the first Governors of the Colony and with the establishment of the Anglican faith throughout Western Australia; and the buildings have a landmark quality in Newcastle Street, York; forming a precinct of mid-nineteenth century ecclesiastical buildings.
